The team started out from California and headed to an active area along the Red River. The team had gotten a tip in the form of an article supposedly entered into the NCIC system that purported to describe a vicious attack that resulted in the death of a young couple. According to the article the young couple had gone to a secluded wooded area by the river to spend some time together. They were attacked in an area which locals say most are warned not to go because of the legends of a creature that protects that area. The young man's head was turned backward his body thrown toward the river, the woman was still on the blanket on the hood of the car was eviscerated. The team visited the local authorities and made inquiries of contacts from the law enforcement services their findings were inconclusive.

The team had also made some contacts prior to arriving with some witnesses who were able to provide compelling stories of their individual encounters with creatures. One such incident was an encounter of a couple of wild boar hunters departing their hunting area and running into two creatures. While the team was exploring the area with one of the hunters he took them to a hunting blind that was fairly elaborate. The hunter had spent a great deal of time weaving and tying the trees together to create a tree-house. It also appeared that the structure had been left in a hurried manner as the two bottom rungs of the constructed ladder (about 2 1/2 inch logs) had been broken and game camera (a $400 piece of equipment), spare ammo, cold gear, wet gear and even a portable toilet were left in the structure.

The team made note of multiple tree breaks surrounding the structure all broke off at the same height about 7 1/2 feet with the trees pointing the same direction. It was very apparent that the trees none smaller than five inches in diameter were still green at the time they were broken. This behavior of the creature is thought to be a warning or a marking of their territory.

The team spent time in this area scouting, tree knocking, and sounding the howl. Team members heard a return call and the newest member reported he was shaken to his core. The team also heard some return knocks but were unable to locate the source. On the other side of the river the team found signs of creatures bedding down, such as hollowed out brush structures. The team speculated that the family pod would spend their day on one side of the river and cross to the other side to hunt for food.

While investigating the area the owner of the adjacent property invited them to continue the search on his 400 acres. He provided them with a picture from a game camera that showed something walking upright away from the feeder (see attached). While they were in that area the owner of the land had a small object thrown at him from the trees which hit him in the back. After picking up the trail of the creatures along the red river the team decided to try moving north to try to get ahead of the creature as it migrated north. On the trek from Texas to Arkansas trying to track the creature and locate the current migratory path the team investigated several possible sightings along the route and gathered new stories and made new friends.

The team plans to be in the field for at least a couple more weeks. Finding and reporting the truth.

About The Searching For Bigfoot Live Capture Team

To prove that Bigfoot exists the Searching For Bigfoot Live Capture Team expeditions cover Bigfoot hotspots across the USA. The team travels to locations where sightings and encounters activity have been reported. They interview the eyewitnesses, go to the sightings locations, track, gather evidence, conduct night time (peak Bigfoot traveling and food gathering activity times) stake outs, set up motion sensor cameras, search for and investigate evidence. The Team often goes into deep wilderness areas to explore activity reports.

These expeditions have produced extensive hours of raw footage which the company plans to use for video, show and movie development. Negotiations have been initiated with 3D Movie production companies to produce Bigfoot 3D movies. Established production companies with affiliated networks are also being sought to work on a new reality based Bigfoot Hunt show.
